USIA Public Diplomacy Activities on Central America

Gaining support for U.S. Central American policy continues to be a major USIA priority. We pursue this effort with all the means available to us, including ongoing media activities as well as special projects. Listed below are some of the more significant programs already carried out, some now underway, and others proposed for the near future.

A. Completed projects

1. Worldnet broadcasts. We have done seven live satellite programs about Central America to Europe and six to Latin America. One of the first of these broadcasts to Latin America featured Henry Kissinger discussing the work of his commission on Central America. Others featured have included Ambassadors Jeane Kirkpatrick and Otto Reich, Assistant Secretary Motley and Richard Scammon.

2. TV Satellite File. This is a collection of news clips and features sent weekly to our posts in more than 80 countries. In fiscal year 1984, 36 of the programs included one or more segments on Central America.

3. Film documentaries. We have produced seven documentaries on the regional themes of Central America, the Caribbean Basin Initiative and Grenada. These have included an overview of the situation in Central America (co-op with Venezuela's major TV network, Venevision); a series on the elections on El Salvador; and a film based on Gen. Paul Gorman's Washington presentation about Nicaraguan subversion. Gorman considered the latter product so effective that he volunteered full cooperation with any future USIA efforts.

4. Wireless File. In the past six months alone, 759 press items relating to Central America were transmitted to our Embassies as background material and for possible press placement. These news stories, commentaries and texts of speeches were then either placed by our posts abroad in local media or given directly to individuals and institutions.

5. AMPARTS. In fiscal year 1984, we sent out 55 AMPARTS to speak about Central America; of these, 33 went to Europe.

6. Press Center briefings. Our foreign press center has organized two tours to the region for West European print and broadcast journalists as well as nine background briefings on Central America.

7. Other audio-visual techniques. We have held 46 broadcast discussions with posts in Europe or Latin America using videotape and telephone hookups between officials in Washington and foreign journalists. Of these, 24 were with European posts.

8. Pamphlets. USIA has produced eight special pamphlets in support of our policy in the region. We have also translated and distributed many other documents produced by the State Department.

B. Pending Projects.

1. European PAO's to Central America. Eight PAO's from European posts are due to visit El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras and Guatemala for 10 days in early December. The purpose is to increase their experience and credibility in programming about Central America with Europeans.

2. Central America Briefing Kit. This is an updated version of an earlier compilation of information and talking points; it is scheduled to reach posts in late November.

3. USIA TV film team to Central America. Footage obtained during a just-completed visit to the region will be used in two ways:

-- A documentary film contrasting the El Salvador and Nicaraguan elections.

-- Newsclips going to posts for TV placement in more than 80 countries.

4. Election coverage. Both the VOA and the Wireless File have reporters in Nicaragua for on-the-scene coverage of the November 4 balloting.

5. Document distribution. We will be making widespread distribution of the State Department's most recent documents on the situation. These include a "resource book" on the Nicaraguan elections and a factual comparison between these elections and those in El Salvador earlier this year.

C. Proposed Future Projects.

1. WORLDNET television programs.

-- A program from Central America to Europe featuring prominent democratic leaders from the region. Included would be such prominent Nicaraguan figures as Arturo Cruz and Virgilio Godoy Reyes, who could address the reasons why they withdrew their parties from the November 4 elections. They could also discuss their reasons for disillusionment with a revolution they originally supported. In addition, we will consider including an official election observer, or a prestigious Latin commentator such as Carlos Rangel of Venezuela.

-- A program for Latin America and possibly Europe with a senior Administration official such as Assistant Secretary of State Motley or NSC Advisor McFarlane. The purpose of this WORLDNET production would be to focus on future directions for Central America following elections in both Nicaragua and the United States; it could also help put the rapidly-shifting Central American political scene into perspective.

-- An interview with SOUTHCOM chief Gen. Paul Gorman. This would be a followup to an earlier highly successful videotape based on the general's Washington presentations on Nicaragua's arms shipments to El Salvador. The focus would be on the military side of what Nicaragua has been doing, the build-up of its own forces as well as support for subversion against its neighbors. General Gorman would use charts, maps, graphs and other displays to illustrate his points as necessary.

2. Caribbean and Central American leaders to Europe. President Duarte's visit to Europe earlier this year demonstrated that few spokesmen can articulate the realities of Central America better than the local leaders themselves. To stimulate more such visits, we suggest that our ambassadors encourage the travel of such officials as Tom Adams (Barbados), John Compton (St. Lucia), Eugenia Charles (Dominica) and Luis Alberto Monge (Costa Rica). The Secretary of State would have to instruct our envoys in the region to approach their host leaders for this purpose. USIA posts would facilitate these visits as appropriate, working with local institutions to ensure that the visitors had the most significant European audiences.

3. Exhibits. We propose to produce an inexpensive multi-media exhibit using the graphics from Gen. Gorman's briefing on Nicaraguan shipment of arms to guerrillas in El Salvador. We would include our Agency film based on the same briefing. In addition, we would add blowups of declassified intelligence photos and evidence about communist subversion activity revealed in the Grenada documents. Multiple copies of this exhibit would be made available principally in Europe and Latin America for showing at local institutions away from U.S. government premises. The Grenada segment could be modeled on the one recently unveiled at the National Archives here.

4. Video lending libraries. We will try a pilot program of giving small format (VHS and Beta) videotapes of some of our documentaries on Central America to video rental shops in selected countries. We would provide these tapes free to the distributors on the understanding that they would not charge their customers for their use.
